

Abstract

Security threats are reduced by providing a TLB in a bus interface unit of a media processor whose contents can be updated only from inside the media processor. The TLB checks whether an address specified by an external access request falls within access-permitted areas registered in it. If it does, an access request from outside is passed on to an inside of the media processor; otherwise, it is rejected.